What happened about the new warehouse-office project?

We decided to delay for a year and re-evaluate the situation. It was very expensive ($350,000) and every time we got any information, it was the final firm estimate for this or that line item was double the price the rough estimate was. This is all old news (a hundred messages discuss this during six months of late last year and early this year) and it need not be gone over again. The price did seem quite high to me (2500 feet of office, 5500 feet of warehouse), every "rough estimate" (say, utility connections, landscaping, taxes, architect fees) doubled when the "real estimate" showed up, and when others who had built buildings looked at the proposed contract and laughed out loud and said "you will be lucky if the contractor only adds $50,000 to the cost through extra charges he will convince you are necessary but could not be anticipated" I just decided to rethink the whole idea.

Update at Midnight: I am in a hotel in Oklahoma City. I plan to get a good night's sleep and a waffle or two before we hit the road in the morning. It is, supposedly, ten hours of "rolling time" to Murfreesboro TN.

MY DAY, 27 AUG (REPORTS BY PETRICK)

1:34pm: SVC and Leanna are in Arkansas and all is well.

5:47pm: SVC and Leanna are safely across the Mississippi and anticipate arriving in Murfreesboro in three to four hours.

9pm: SVC and Leanna are in Murfreesboro and have met the playtest group there.

MY DAY, 28 AUG

Dragoncon Trip, 4pm (report by SVC): We are in the hotel in Atlanta. The room is great (big, cool, very nice), but outside the door is a 105 degree construction zone with carpenters and painters going every which way. We may or may not try to get to the zoo (We didn't until Monday). The four hour drive took six hours and I'm shot.

MY DAY: FRIDAY 29 AUG 08

DragonCon: Went to the con, talked to the guys doing the tournament, found out that their reports of "sixty people" in the tournament include ten or twelve in the tournament and the rest people who stopped by to watch a demo game. Convention has an insane number of people, treats gamers like crap, and treats SFB gamers worse since it considers them part of "trek track" but gives them no support for the revenue they generate. Even so, good to meet a lot of people. Jean showed up in mid-afternoon.

MY DAY: SATURDAY 30 AUG 08

DragonCon: Jean and I sat at the tournament all day working on PD20M while Leanna did SciFi things.

MY DAY: SUNDAY 31 AUG 08

DragonCon: Sick. Stayed in room and sort of worked on PD20M.

END OF AUG 2008
